Postponed Three Times.

Two years after meeting Brown, she said, he asked permission to call member regularly for the purpose of proveing his affection toward her. For a year, she said, they met frequently and he was lavish in his attentions. Then, in December, 1908, according to Miss Waldo's story, Brown protoced marriage and was accepted. The date of their mariage was set for December, 1908 But when the time arrived, she continued. Brown asked for a post-ponement of one year. "He said he was so happy over our engagement that he halted to break the charm," Miss Waldo declared. At the end of this year, Brown still was not ready to go to the altar, the bestiton states When he obtained the taid annual postronement of their marriage in 1912, Miss Waldo said, he promised that should be the last, and that she was to make him the 'happiest of men." Throughout this time he showered her with gifts of books and flowers and jewelry, she declared.

In August, 1912, she alleged, he stopped calling but he continued to write her occasionally. The following December, she said, she hearned that he had been married, but had continued to write to her after his marriage. As a result of this discovery, she alleged, she was ill for several months.

Froze Out Suitors.

There had been other opportunities throughout these years, Miss Waldo told the court through her attorneys, to make desirable matches, but she "clove unto him to the exclusion of other capable and honest suitors of high social standing and wealth."

In his answer to Miss Waldo's petition in 1916, Brown admitted having met ter in November, 1965, but denied that at that time she was 20 years old, and siso he declared he had hot seen her for a fong time prior to August, 1913. He was married in September, 1914, the said, and subsequent to his mavriage received one letter from Miss Waldo, requesting financial aid, which he ignored.
